Survey results show we are on track

TODAY the club publishes, as promised, the supporters' survey results in full.

Many of its detailed findings prove Wycombe Wanderers are well on-track as a family club, with strong ties with the community. But, as usual with surveys, there are several surprises.

Considering Wycombe Wanderers' average league gate is 5,500-6,000, it is a tremendous credit to our supporters that 927 replied in full. Derby County, who ran a similar survey last year, with average gates of 14,000-15,000, only managed 921 replies – Well done all Blues fans!

Studying the results, it was fascinating that more than 65 per cent of our supporters are aged 26-54, when one would have expected a broader, less concentrated spread. It was good to see only 2.9 per cent of our supporters are unemployed and 50.3 per cent are season ticket holders.

What was encouraging for both the team and the marketing department was the reasons

By Wycombe Wanderers Sales and Marketing Manager Mark Austin

people gave for not turning up for matches. More than 75 per cent could not come to all matches because of work, family, or other commitments. As none of these can be avoided, it is a credit to the club that it comes so high on our fans' priorities.

I was personally delighted that nearly 72 per cent would support a no-smoking policy. Possibly, this could now be introduced in certain areas, ensuring that any person who wished to smoke and watch football could do so with like-minded individuals. As a non smoker, I always hate it when the person next to me invades my fresh air by smoking. Better that they feel free to do so and not have to worry about polluting somebody else's lungs.

With regard to availability of tickets, 57.9 per cent wished to be able to purchase them via the credit card hotline, with nearly 80 per cent wanting to do so before the day of a match. This is something the sales and marketing department will be responding to and has already ensured that terrace tickets are on sale from Wanderers in Town for non-all ticket matches, Monday to Friday, 9am-5.30pm. While on the subject of the attitude and service of the sales and marketing department, I would like to thank the 95.8 per cent who thought the department was good or fair. I can only assume the 4.2 per cent who thought the department was poor must have ticked the wrong box.

I was pleased for our hard-working voluntary Matchday Programme editor, Adrian Wood, and his team, that the programme provided "the best information about the club".

Our supporters chose it as their number one, with the Bucks Free Press second, the Blues News third, Ringing the Blues fourth and elevenSEVENTY fifth. Congratulations to Adrian and his staff.

My personal thanks to all the 927 people who took time to fill in the supporters' survey; everybody at the club will be studying the results closely, to see what we can learn, and how to respond to the wishes of all our supporters. Thank you all and well done!

Winning is fans' best comfort

IN the long gone days of my youth, I followed Liverpool all over the country.

As terrace fans, my mates and I had to put up with poor public transport, endless queues to get in, overcrowding behind the goal, turgid tea and cold, disgusting meat pies ... and that was just for home games!

In those days, Anfield was a throwback to another era, and those of us who stood on the Kop had to endure pretty basic conditions. We often wondered if the patrons of the directors' box had any idea what it was like to watch from behind our goal.

While they enjoyed a place in the car park, premium seat and private bar, they chose to do nothing about improving conditions for the paying customer.

And yet there were very few complaints. We put up with things for one simple reason: success. Liverpool were winning matches, winning trophies and winning championships.

The money, which could have been diverted towards ground improvements, was being spent on building a great team, and Anfield was full for every game.

Times have changed dramatically since that era, of course.

The Taylor Report - and a more demanding public - have forced clubs to spend fortunes on improving spectator facilities, and this country now boasts some of the best grounds in Europe. Here at Wycombe Wanderers, we have a stadium to be proud of and we are constantly looking at ways of improving it.

Many small but significant changes have taken place at Adams Park since we moved in four years ago and they have all been carried out to make life more comfortable for you, our loyal supporters. But now we have reached the stage where a decision must be made about a big step forward.

The board have looked at several ambitious plans for a major re-development of the Woodland Terrace which would turn it into a substantial seating area with all the appropriate facilities. Naturally, this would be a very expensive exercise, and,

Still watching: Alan Parry can speak from long experience about the supporter's viewpoint

By Alan Parry

although substantial funds could be raised through various grants, the outlay by this club would still need to be very considerable indeed.

And this is where the debate begins. Those who run the playing side of the club will argue they need the cash to build a bigger and better squad. But those who manage Wanderers' business affairs will insist that providing better facilities will attract bigger crowds. Basically, the dilemma could be summed up with a simple question: would you rather have new seats or a new centre forward?

As I mentioned earlier, I know what it's like to stand on the terraces. But that was many years ago, and I now have the privilege of a comfortable seat in the directors' box. Maybe I'm out of touch with the views of supporters standing behind the goal.

When I stood on the terraces, I was happy to endure some discomfort as long as my team were winning. Have times really changed that much? Do today's fans regard good facilities as more important than success on the field? I would love to see Adams Park become a 20,000 seater stadium with hospitality boxes and executive lounges. But first I want to see Wycombe Wanderers become firmly established as a professional club with a successful team.

That means buying the right kind of talented, experienced players and paying them the going rate. It means recruiting professional people, steeped in the game, to scout for new players, run the rule over other teams and perform the many other tasks which help to make a football club successful. And it means spending more money on our youth development programme, a vital part of the club's long-term future.

We have come a very long way in a very short period of time, and I believe this is a vital moment in the club's evolution. We could tread water and consolidate what we have already achieved - or we could continue to move onwards and upwards. To do that, we must strengthen the playing squad by dipping our feet into the transfer market. I believe that must be our number one priority.

Unlike most of my fellow directors, I am not a businessman with experience of running a successful company. But I have been around the professional football world for many years and I do have an idea of what it takes to be successful in this precarious, unpredictable sport.

I have learned one very simple lesson - nothing matters more than the result. You can have the pipedream of a state-of-the-art stadium with restaurants, bars and private boxes. You can have a slick business set-up, geared to hiring out those facilities every day of the week. You can have a commercial department ready to cash in on your success. But, unless you have a winning team, you have nothing.

I must stress this is my personal view and not one necessarily shared by all the members of the board. Some of my colleagues believe our future lies in building a bigger, better Adams Park with improved parking. Others believe we can achieve all that and still have some money left over to buy new players.

My opinion is that all available funds should go towards strengthening the team. I believe winning matches will generate the funds to improve the stadium - not the other way round.

But it's YOUR view that's most important. If you were given a choice between better facilities or better players, how would YOU vote? The idea of The Blues News is to provide a forum for supporters' opinions, so let's hear from you on this crucial issue. We'll print your views in a forthcoming edition.

Ladies' team is on the lookout

LADIES, are you aware that Wycombe Wanderers have had their own ladies' team for several years?

They play in the Southern Region Football League, now affiliated to the Football Association, but were relegated to Division Three last year.

The team has got off to a good start this year, beating opponents from higher leagues and playing in five and six-a-side competitions.

The aim for this year is promotion back to Division Two.

Players' ages range from 14 to 36, and they have a fully qualified FA coach to take training on Tuesday and Thursday evenings. Games are on Sunday afternoons.

Try this fantasy line-up for size

By Alan Parry

Since Fantasy Football teams are all the rage these days, I thought I'd have a bit of fun by nominating an eleven who I think would beat any team in the world... and they've all "appeared" for Wycombe Wanderers!

I've only got three defenders in my line-up because, with a side like this, you wouldn't need to do much defending!

So here goes:

GOALKEEPER: Ray Clemence (Liverpool, Spurs and England)

DEFENCE: Tommy Smith (Liverpool and England), John McGrath (Southampton and England), Jack Charlton (Leeds and England)

MIDFIELD: Sir Stanley Matthews (Blackpool and England), Martin O'Neill (Nottingham Forest and Northern Ireland), Glenn Hoddle (Spurs and England), Trevor Brooking (West Ham and England)

ATTACK: Gary Lineker (Spurs and England), Dennis Law (Manchester United and Scotland), George Best (Manchester United and Northern Ireland)

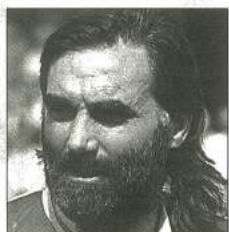

I've got a couple of substitutes just in case O'Neill's dodgy knee lets him down again. On the bench would be Frank Worthington (England - and just about every club you can think of), Duncan McKenzie (Everton) and a reserve keeper, Bob Wilson (Arsenal and Scotland).

My team would have the ideal manager, former England boss Bobby Robson, their own pre-match entertainment in Roger De Courcy and Nookie Bear, and even their own commentator John Motson.

Believe it or not, every one of that galaxy of sporting stars has performed for enthusiastic crowds at Adams Park during the past four years - without a ball being kicked. They are just some of the entertainers who've helped to pack out the Vere Suite on the nights of Wycombe Wanderers famous Sportsman's Dinners.

Midfield dream: Martin O'Neill in his playing days

Forward fantasy: Daddy of them all George Best

If you've never been to one of these functions, you've missed out on a lot of fun. Guests gather in the bars for a pre-dinner drink and the atmosphere is always lively by the time the master-of-ceremonies (yours truly) picks up the microphone to introduce the top table.

Chairman Ivor Becks and manager, Martin O'Neill are always on hand to help out with a few well-chosen words.

Top prizes are on offer in the raffle and we often have a fun quiz which gets the arguments going on every table. A superb four-course meal is served before the start of the evening's entertainment.

As you can imagine, the speakers

I've listed above have regaled us with some marvellous stories. Fascinating insights into what goes on behind the scenes in football have been laced with humorous - and often libellous - stories of all the game's great characters.

And the entertainment isn't over when our guest speaker has taken his applause.

At each function, we engage a leading after-dinner comedian to send everyone to the bar in a happy mood - and with a few new jokes to tell their friends the next morning.

The whole evening is very relaxed - lounge suits or smart jacket is the dress code - and you can spend as little or as much as you like on the night. The price of admission is £40 - and, remember, that includes a four-course dinner, entertainment, coffee and mints.

If you can get a few mates to join you on a table, the price comes down. We open the bars at 6pm. Guests take their places at the tables at 7.15pm and we leave plenty of time for a last drink before you go home.

Trevor Brooking kicked off our new season of Sportsman's Dinners and the rest of the line-up looks like this:

Monday, November 14th - Dave Bassett, "Harry" the chirpy cockney, former member of the Wimbledon Crazy Gang, now manager of Sheffield United.

Monday, January 30th - Gareth Chilcott, the not-so-gentle giant of England and British Lions rugby fame.

Monday, March 13th - Norman Hunter, old "Bites yer legs" recounts his days with Leeds and England.

Monday May 15th - John Conte, the Liverpool boxer turned showbiz celebrity.

■ If you'd like any more information about our dinners, please contact our sales and marketing manager Mark Austin at the club. Whether it be you, your friends or your company, you're guaranteed a great night out.

Cyrille boosts busy August

By Terry Evans

It was a boost for the team when he Gaffer managed to secure the services of Cyrille Regis.

I can confirm he has kept himself in excellent shape and feel confident that he will continue to produce goals.

August was a very busy month for the team. It was important to try and get off to a good start against Cambridge, especially after the pre-season games which were not too exciting with us scoring only a few goals.

I was very pleased to be fit and elected for our baptism into division two. I felt even better after knocking he ball down for Gars to score after just two minutes. Cambridge did break it us from very direction for short periods of the game, but I was satisfied we worked hard to deserve our first victory.

We knew it was going to be tough on our first away trip at Huddersfield. A 14,000 crowd in a superb stadium waited their first home game of the season. I did not feel at all upset in polling their party and coming away with all three points. We again worked hard for our win and dug in when we needed to.

Our early exit from the League Cup was a bitter disappointment, especially after our performance's last season. But we picked ourselves up to gain our more points from our next two games without conceding a goal.

For those who were unable to make the long trip to Bradford, it is fair to say we let ourselves and our supporters down and were outplayed by a side I feel will challenge for promotion.

I recently received a letter from Alan Vickers, who watches games from the Bucks Free Press stand. He wanted to know, when we win the toss, what are the reasons behind the teams decision to choose ends and also from the kick off what is our ploy now Scotty and Gupps are not out wide to knock the ball to.

When we come on to the pitch, we normally warm up at the Bucks Free end. So, even if we lost the toss, this would suggest we prefer to have the end where our own supporters are massed during the second half.

It is often late on that we may need the full vocal encouragement of our own fans. But, of course, this can work against us. When a big crowd like Birmingham comes to Adams Park, they will probably make even more noise, as all away fans tend to.

We, therefore, look at each game as it comes and how the team feels on the day. The weather is also a factor to consider, but I do try not to put too much importance on this particular aspect, because the opposition may win the toss and look to change anything we have planned.

Regarding the kick off, my own personal opinion is to try and keep possession for the first few minutes. We could go full steam into them, but then run the risk of suffering from a quick counter-attack and concede an early goal.

Even though it would be wonderful to score in either the first or last few minutes of each half, it is important not to concede a goal at these times.

Finally, I could not finish without mentioning the last game before going to press, the visit of Brentford. When the fixture list was first announced, this was the game I and Jason looked for. I did not feel any undue pressure. To me, it was just another game, with three more points on offer. I prepared in the same way hoping I could produce a good performance. However, I could not fail to be impressed with the welcome the Brentford faithful gave me.

Scoring my first goal of the season after just eight minutes was a tremendous feeling, especially against my old club. I was, of course, very pleased with the result. I was grateful to hear the final whistle. Brentford deserved something from the game. I was moved by the Brentford supporters. Even though defeated, they still waited to chant my name as the teams left the field. I am already looking forward to our visit to Griffin Park in March.

THE BLUES NEWS

Transfer glitter is fool's gold

IN the last issue I wrote about the division created between them and us referring to the Premiership and other divisions.

I watched with interest a recent programme on Sky Sports which took the argument even further, suggesting there were two halves to the top flight, with the likes of West Ham, Leicester, Ipswich and Coventry being the lowly clubs. I need not name the top teams.

Gordon Taylor, the chairman of the PFA, has said there are too many foreign players coming into our country, taking jobs from home-grown talent. I feel he should be concerned about the amount of his talented members sitting in top clubs' reserves.

What happens in the Premiership will, in the long term, surely have an even bigger effect elsewhere. Coventry are a Premiership club, although not one of the glamour names. Phil Babb progressed there and played in the World Cup. I am sure Coventry were possibly prepared to make him the club's top earner, just to keep him. But, what does he do? He decides to move from a secure position to an even bigger club, earn even more money, but put himself under the spotlight, with the possibility he may not quite fit in at Liverpool.

A team can only field 11 players at once, with two outfield substitutes, and it's arguable Liverpool already had two central defenders worth a total of six million pounds. So did they really need Babb?

Manchester United had trouble convincing Paul Ince to sign a new deal. United are arguably the biggest club in the world. Why then, would Ince want to delay signing?

I also wrote in the last issue about Dean Holdsworth who was very pleased to move to Wimbledon from Brentford for £750,000. He has played two seasons in the

Personal view by Steve Hayes

Premiership and was recently reported as signing a five-year contract.

After Scales moved to Liverpool, he, or possibly his agent, decided he should put in a transfer request. Why? Is he not in the first team? Is he not already earning enough money? Have Sam Hammam and Joe Kinnear not been good to him? Would Venables not pick him for the England squad?

It did put a smile on my face when I read that Ronnie Whelan - 33 this month - was not happy with the deal Liverpool were offering him. I doubt many of us could manage on a mere £5,000 a week either, but Liverpool withdrew their offer and released him.

It was a breath of fresh air when Jurgen Klinsmann said he has enough money and wanted to join a club in this country that plays the game in the right way.

He added he would give payments for interviews to charity. If Spurs have a good season, will he be interested in a move to Newcastle to improve himself? I very much doubt it.

Have we reached the point where the best players will only want to sign for the very best clubs? Well, I can only remember two who did not - Steve Bull and Stuart Pearce. But will we ever again see a top British name refuse a move because he is satisfied where he is?

I expect many clubs look forward to the day when a player's morals and loyalty cannot be bought. I only hope the press do not say he lacks ambition!

It is suggested agents are behind these players pushing for moves. However, in my opinion it is not only agents who stir up problems. The big clubs seem to use players in any way possible to achieve success.

I remember when Blackburn were in the First Division. Their closest rivals at the time were Swindon, with Duncan Shearer knocking in a large percentage of their goals. Blackburn bought him in the April for around £800,000 but played him only a few times before off-loading him to Aberdeen.

Did Blackburn take a business decision to prise away a player to give themselves a better chance of promotion? Ask any of the Swindon supporters if they feel this was the case and I am confident of the answer.

Shearer has possibly earned well from his moves, and Blackburn have not broken any rules. But is this a correct thing to do, and should it be allowed to happen again? I agree with the football authorities that a change in transfer rules is necessary.

Managers already have all summer to decide what players they need for the coming season. I have always thought the reason for having reserves was that, if a player became injured, a replacement would be brought in.

If a Premiership club has a player who suffers a long-term injury, they may look to clubs like Wanderers to strengthen their squad. But what happens when the injured player is fit again?

Do we get our player back, or does he then become another one of their reserves before being off-loaded elsewhere?

Martin O'Neill has to constantly face top players being taken away, sometimes even halfway through the season.

It must be very hard for managers to convince players that what may seem a plum move could turn out to be nothing more than a wasted career, sitting in the reserves of a club in a higher league, with a few more quid in their pockets.
